A special committee has been appointed by the American Farm Bureau to confer with a like committee of the national association of farm equipment manufacturers, National Implement and Vehicle Dealers' association and the American association of agricultural engineers in an effort to work out a system of standardization of farm machinery. The special committee will make its report to a larger meeting of all these groups in the hope of effecting a saving in the cost of farm implements.

Great interest has been shown in the annual meetings of the various Farm Bureaus according to information given out at state headquarters at Lincoln. These meetings have been attended in most instances by 150 to 200 farmers who have shown a keen desire to put the Farm Bureau program over during the coming year. J. N. Norton, Nebraska director of organization, H. D. Lute, secretary and F. M. Deweese of the legal department also J. A. Crawford, state manager of the U. S. Grain growers have appeared before most of the county meetings, along with representatives of the extension service.

Owing to the present experience of farmers with a surplus corn crop with a surplus of other crops, the board of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation believes it is an opportune time to curtail grain production, particularly corn, and at the same time rebuild the soil with other crops. Consequently at the December board meeting a resolution was passed saying, in part: "We believe it in keeping with sound principles to so plan the crop acreages for 1922 that these conditions (surplus crops and wearing of soil) be remedied by the increased planting of alfalfa, clovers and other leguminous crops."

The Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation has been advised that action is soon to be taken by the post office department at Washington to restore the practice of delivering mail at third and fourth class post offices to rural patrons on Sundays. This practice was discontinued sometime ago and Secretary H. D. Lute took the matter up with the postmaster general and with the Nebraska delegation in congress. Senator George W. Norris and Congressman Reavis and Jeffers were all very active in presenting the case of the Nebraska Farm Bureau to post office authorities.

Charles E. Gunnels, treasurer of the American Farm Bureau Federation and director of organization will deliver the main address at the state convention of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation at Lincoln January 5, instead of J. G. Brown, president of the Indiana Farm Bureau Federation as previously announced. Gunnels has been a leader in the state and federal extension service for several years previous to his connection with the American Farm Bureau Federation. Since connecting with the American Farm Bureau Federation he has become a leader in the movement, is a forceful speaker and the Nebraska Federation is very fortunate in securing him for that date. Mrs. Charles Schuttler of Missouri, chairman of the women's committee of the American Farm Bureau Federation will be the main speaker for the women's section of the state convention. The Farm Bureau Federation convention, which is held in connection with organized agriculture week, will be held January 5 and 6. W. H. Brokaw, director of extension, state agricultural college, will speak on "The New Extension Program."

For those who do not have enough stock or machinery for a general farm sale, I am located so I can hold a combination sale at North Platte or at the Fairview dairy 1 1/2 miles west of town. I have always got enough stock or machinery listed with me so we can hold a combination sale any time.

HOW A HORSE BALANCES HIMSELF

An old farmer who had worked with horses most of his life once told me that his son, a man of mature years, formerly used the over-check rein on his horses, but was cured of the habit by an accident that shows how important it is for a horse to have free use of his head and neck.

"We were driving at a lively trot," he said, "with the horse's head sharply reined up, when suddenly he stumbled and fell to his knees. The horse naturally tried to use his reined-up head and neck to balance himself. The rein snapped in two places and was thrown into the road many feet ahead. It hit the ground with a thump that showed something of how hard the poor creature had tried to keep himself from falling. He was not seriously hurt, but he might have been, and so might we."

"I always knew," I remarked, "that a horse needs to use the muscles of his neck in pulling a load. One can see that by watching him arch his neck in pulling, whenever it is free. But I had not thought of his using his neck as a balancing pole."

"Just as you throw out one or both of your arms when you are about to fall," the farmer explained. "And did you know that a fox balances himself with his tail in running, and a squirrel with his in climbing? Nature made no mistake in furnishing them with their long, bushy tails, nor the horse with a neck which he can move freely in all directions when man doesn't interfere with its movement."

The neck of a fine horse is a magnificent thing, with its proud arch and great strength—"clothed with thunder," as in the sublime description in the book of Job. But the poor horse whose neck is drawn up with a checkrein—the "ewe-necked" horse, or the one with the arch of his neck on the wrong side—not much poetry or magnificence there; very little grace or beauty, and less than the normal agility and strength.—Elizabeth Waddell, in Our Dumb Animals.
